Children benefit from inclusive education.

It gives them the experiences, the access to learning and skill development that can prepare them for a full life in the community.

Some suggest that children with greater needs need inclusion even more than most so they can have a chance to form the peer relations, friendships and connections that can serve them well in their life journey.

Education in Canada is now in a transition phase. The traditional approaches to special education are giving way to more inclusive practices in our schools. In some places the progress is remarkable, in others, it is just underway. We know that inclusion presents challenges to parents, teachers, school leaders and policy makers. It can be a significant challenge to make the changes in school and classroom practice that are needed for inclusion to be a success.

There is knowledge available on what is needed to make inclusion successful and what it takes to make the change process work well.

OUR PARTNERS – have included faculty and staff of the University of Prince Edward Island, McGill University, OISE – University of Toronto, Ryerson University, University of Calgary, The Canadian Teachers Federation, The Canadian Home & School Association, The Canadian Education Association, The University of Quebec at Montreal and others.

What we can provide

TRAINING –

- Classroom teachers, special education teachers, resource or support teachers, school leaders including principals, supervisors and district or board staff.
- Parents, agency staff, advocates:
 - Keynote and conference speakers;
 - One or two day seminars on specific topics;
 - Week long institutes;
 - Individually developed training.

Our network can offer you support in the move forward to inclusive education practices in your community, schools and classrooms.

CONSULTATION & COLLABORATION – we can arrange consultation with one or more stakeholder groups to move inclusion forwards.

STRATEGIC PLANNING – we can work with your group to develop a strategic plan based on “best practices” to develop successful inclusive education programs in your community.

EVALUATION – we can establish a team to review educational practices in a school, a board or district and provide evaluation and feedback.

OTHER SUPPORTS as needed by school and educational institutions, as well as parents and parent associations.
